Project Title

The Iris Community Meeting Room

About your project/what are you seeking funding for?

The Iris Arts will develop a community room that people living locally can call their own. Aligning with local priorities, Adult and Family Learning, Youth Work, Financial Inclusion and Community Development, we can develop a space adjoining our Community Studio where people living locally can meet, share and learn. This will provide a space for our Youth Volunteers to meet, learn and create, families to engage in creative learning classes and older people to learn and feel less isolated. We will work towards a Peer Empowerment model where people can engage, learn from our team and in turn teach each other.

We are developing the former Darlington church, a B listed building, in the heart of Ayr North to create a community hub, a creative learning centre and an accessible community cinema and theatre so that people living locally can engage in creative learning at a reduced cost or for free. This will build confidence in the community and support self-esteem amongst people living there who want to learn new creative skills.

We are seeking capital funding to support the development of the space to create an accessible place where people can come together, learn and share. To develop this space we are looking for funding for building work, a new window, fire door, flooring, a staff toilet and a joinery work to create desks and shelves for a creative community library, and chairs for groups.

Funding will allow us to build a room in the former Vestry of a building that has lain derelict for 17 years and complement the development of our community studio so that people can access groups that align with local priorities and make Ayr North a more accessible place to live and help the community to feel more empowered.

The building sits in an area of high deprivation and many people live in poverty, and are marginalised, have disabilities, face addiction issues and social isolation. Many young people living here are Young Carers and/or are at risk of entering the criminal justice system. Having a space that they can use to learn means that diversionary activities like film education, film making workshops and creative activities can empower them and lead them to more positive destinations.

By having a space to meet and learn, people living locally can have the opportunity to create valuable work in a space that they can take ownership of and we have a successful track record of award-winning work created by Young People living here.

Having a space for them to learn in will give them the opportunity to meet more regularly and take pride in their place and work so that they can work together, learn from our team and teach each other. People can become familiar with the space and have opportunities to volunteer at events taking place in the adjoining studio, creating employability opportunities and supporting Young People to feel empowered. Older people can engage in volunteering opportunities, meet new people, and feel less socially isolated.

We have already received in kind support from the community payback team who have cleared the room out and made it accessible for development and funding would allow us to develop the space into a useable, functioning space that serves and inspires people living locally.

We have received many donations of plays, books and film education texts so building a small library space will make it more user friendly and people can access specialist books for creative learning, have a cuppa and chat to others or find solace in what interests them.

We have applied for funding for laptops and digital learning equipment and have recently received funding for new filmmaking equipment that can be used by people who want to learn and create. We have received funding to develop our community studio that will be open to the public and host events and workshops and by having a dedicated space for learning and meeting, people living locally can engage, volunteer and find the confidence to host their own events and screenings in the adjoining studio.

Young People and Older People alike can learn the following skills-

To make films from a professional film-maker

To write scripts from a professional playwright

To express themselves and their feelings through film so that we can make change in our communities

To learn podcasting skills

To produce podcasts

To create costume and set

To create make-up and hair design from professionals

To build and design set

To create content for business

To host their own cinema exhibition events

Entrepreneurial Skills to develop content for business and create events

Digital Literacy

Fashion Design

By learning these skills people in the community can improve mental health and well-being, feel less isolated and work towards employability goals by improving confidence and self-esteem. By having a dedicated meeting space, we can ensure people can work with our team and develop ways to work with each other to share and empower each other towards more positive futures and inform the development of the studio space next door at the same time

What community will this project be delivered in and what communities will benefit?

The Iris is situated in Ayr North and while this project will benefit people living locally, the development of the building as whole will benefit the wider Ayr Community, the whole of South Ayrshire and attract people and tourists from further afield when the building is open.

Please provide information you have about the need and support for the project, eg community consultation

Since we began our journey as a CIC in 2019, we have been consulting with the community on our plans to develop the building into a community arts hub via consultation. We have carried out online consultation, social media consultation and face to face consultation at events and by meeting and visiting groups. During lockdown we hosted online cinema sessions, followed by consultation an evaluation and we developed and delivered Scotland's first Covid Safe Drive in Movie Event. Although restricted, this supported us to continue to consult with the public regarding the need for the project and helped us to evaluate what we needed to do to make sure the future of the building was shaped by people living locally. We engaged with 8000 people during these events and continue to engage with them today. In the last 3 years we have delivered free or reduced cost cinema to 30,000 people living locally delivered projects with over 10,000 people via our film making, theatre and cinema workshops, and continue to engage with people via online surveys and consultation. We developed and produced the Inaugural Wallacetown Community Arts Festival in 2024 with over 1000 attended at events running over the course of a week, and produced the second festival in 2025 with greater numbers and improved engagement meaning we could engage with the heart of the community on our doorstep. This has helped us to keep our consultation current and user led, and the number of people engaging in a wide variety activity has produced powerful evaluation, meaning people can shape the future of the building and the activity they wish to engage in. We deliver projects from infant age to older people which gives us a real grasp on what our community want to engage in, learn about and it helps us to shape the projects we offer, empowering the community to learn. We have bank of volunteers ranging from 15 to 75 and our creative youth volunteer group and women's drama group have gone from strength to strength, offering a space for people to learn and find confidence to create on their doorstep. They are keen to see the building open and have dedicated space to learn but also to offer peer support sessions in time too, so that they can teach others living locally to be empowered by the arts like they were. Positivity for our project has been overwhelming and we have on average 20 new requests per month for space for groups to meet or classes and workshops where people can learn. Anecdotally, last month, our signage blew down in the storm and we have had 120 messages enquiring about what was happening to the building because the sign had come down.
